Class President Meet

The Association of Class Presidents held its first meeting of the present year last Wednesday. There were present Messrs. Burch, Collins, Machler, Atkinson, Boyd and Hemmick of the old association, and Messrs. Woodward, Collins, Newbold, West, Atkinson, French, McCallum, Wilson, Athey, Pepper and McLean of the new.

Mr. Burch as vice-president of last year presided. After some preliminary discussion the association proceeded to the election of officers for the year, with the following results:

President, Irvin I. Pepper, Senior Class.

Vice-President, Henry E. Collins, Junior Arts and College.

Secretary, Edward C. Wilson, Sophomore Medical.

Treasurer, Frank West, Freshman Arts and College.

The association then proceeded to the discussion of various matters, principally that of an annual. By a unanimous vote it was decided to publish another annual and Mr. Pepper was appointed as a committee to make arrangements and report at the next meeting.

The association for the present year consists of the following gentlemen:

Arts and College:

Senior, Mark R. Woodward.

Junior, Harry E. Collins.

Freshman, Frank West.

Architecture, R. Bruce Atkinson.

Medicine:

Senior, W. J. French.

Junior, Hiram McCall m.

Freshman, Athey.

Dentistry, Adelbert M. Bassford.

Law:

Senior, Irvin I. Pepper.

Junior, Donald H. McLean.

Freshman, R. G. Moore.

On Monday evening, at a special meeting of the Association of Class Presidents, the matter of the University Annual was thoroughly discussed. It was decided by the association to meet the different members of the faculty at a dinner to be held January 7th, in order to complete plans for putting this publication upon a permanent basis. The members of the association are desirous of starting this work in such a way that it will prove a lasting benefit to the University, and with this end in view, and for the purpose of getting the ideas of the faculty thereon, decided that there should be a meeting where the matter could be thoroughly discussed by both the members of the faculty and the association.

An executive committee composed of Mr. French, Senior Medical, chairman; Mr. Woodward, Senior College, and Mr. McLean, Junior Law, was appointed by the president, and will have active charge of the preparations for the coming dinner. It is earnestly desired by members of the Association of Class Presidents that many members of the faculty will be present and lend their aid and encouragement to this important move.

Canoe Club Recognized

A meeting of the George Washington University Canoe Club was held on the 12th instant, when a letter from President Needham, through Professor Wilbur, secretary of the President's Council, addressed to the club, was read, wherein it officially recognized the University Canoe Club.

The club was formed last summer, but owing to the absence from the city, President Deedham, together with furnishing certain data required with reference to the club, the matter hung fire until quite recently.

The individual members, however, were busy, with the result, a dance is to be given at Carroll Institute, Friday, December 30, 1904, invitations for which have already been issued.

At the club's last meeting it was decided to name the club after the school, the George Washington University Canoe Club. Inasmuch as the club will be under the supervision of the Athletic Council of the University, and will, in the near future, be represented upon that body, it was thought appropriate to name it as it now stands, in accordance with the suggestion of Dr. W. F. R. Phillips.

It is the purpose of the club to build a boat-house upon the Potomac at some future date, wherein the University will have a home for its crew, when it decides to enter the aquatic arena, and with this object in view, dances and entertainments of other characters will be held during the year, in order to assist this project—a most welcome one.

The club holds its encampment at Broadwater, above the Chain Bridge, during the months of July and August. The club-house here will be situated on the water's edge, and more or less of a "shack" for eating and lounging, surrounded by the respective tents of the members. Its location will be more or less dependent upon the new railroad to Great Falls now under construction.

The officers are as follows:

Commodore, R. C. Heflebower.

Vice-Commodore, W. H. Smith, Jr.

Fleet Captain, L. G. Sutton.

Fleet Captain, Ralph S. Clinton.

Dramatic Club

At the regular meeting of the Dramatic Club on last Monday, Mr. Robert Hickman, the dramatic coach, was present and delivered a short address to the club.

Mr. Hickman dwelt upon the importance of college dramatics, of the different college clubs and the high position occupied by many of them throughout the country.

He spoke in the highest terms of the performance given by the club last year, and expressed the conviction that with the material evidenced at that time, together with the new members of the club, the George Washington Dramatic Club should attain a position similar to that of the best known college organizations. He then outlined the courses which he thought the club should pursue, at first the presentation of three or four one-act farces, later a three or four act comedy, and for the final production either a Shakespearean or other classic production. Mr. Hickman was listened to with the greatest attention by the members and his plans met with entire and hearty approval.

Three one-act plays, "My Mother's Bonnet," "Chums," and "Maria," were selected for the first performance, and rehearsals will begin directly following the holidays. The rehearsals will be held on Monday evenings. Mr. Hickman will at once assume charge and unless some unforeseen hitch occurs the production should be ready by the first of February.

Columbian College

The Senior Class of Columbian College held a meeting on Friday, December 16, to perfect arrangements for the Senior reception. The reports of the subcommittees all point to a most successful evening. The event of the 13th will take the form of a reception to the faculty. This will take place in West Hall, and will be followed by an entertainment given by college talent in University Hall. Afterwards the Library and West Hall will be given over to dancing for the remainder of the evening. The programs will be buff with a bust of Washington in blue. The invitations appear today, and it is hoped that a large attendance will respond so that nothing will be lacking to make this dance a fitting close to a most prosperous year.

Cards are out for the Senior reception in the University Building on the evening of December 30th. On addressing these invitations the official register was used, and as this is not always complete, in spite of Mr. Swett's fugal revisions, it is desired that any Columbian student who fails to receive one should obtain it from his or her class president, or some member of the Senior Class.

It is intended to make this a most successful occasion, and a very large attendance is already assured. In fact, special arrangements have been made to accommodate the large gathering in order to avoid any uncomfortable crowding. Admission is to be by card only, so be sure to secure yours.

Last week witnessed the formation of another organization in the College. On Friday, December 16, the eight charter members of the Hod Carriers' Union held its first regular meeting. A constitution was adopted and eight officers were provided, one for each charter member, as follows: Head Foreman, Foreman of the Night Shift, Brick Inspector, Time Boss, Night Watchman, Bouncer, Utensil Hurrier, and Walking Delegate. The specific objects of the organization are withheld from print for the present, but concern the welfare of the engineering students; most of the membership of the H. C. U. will be drawn from the class in building construction, outsiders being admitted as honorary members with full privileges, at the discretion of the union.

The Skating Club made the most of its opportunity last week to get in some fine sport while the ice lasted. Thursday night a very gay party, armed with good things to eat, gathered at Chevy Chase Lake, and enjoyed themselves till a late hour, in spite of the light snow that was falling. The affair planned for Friday night brought out several more crack skaters, among both boys and girls, and was the most enjoyable of all the parties yet given. The program included a glorious moonlight skate, a snowy tramp across country, and finally a hot oyster supper at the hospitable country home of one of the members. The fun prolonged itself to an unconscionable hour, and the club members are now devoutly praying for more ice as soon as possible.

The Architects

For the first problem of the class, "A Doorway for a Palace"—the committee of awards, consisting of Mr. Totten and Mr. Peter, of the firm of Marsh and Peter, with Professor Ash announced their decision Wednesday evening. First place was won by S. P. Wagner, second place by Mr. Bubbs, while Miss Maud Meigs received honorable mention.

The whole set of drawings, twelve in number, was pronounced very good. After the award the class held a meeting to elect a president. R. Bruce Atkinson was unanimously chosen to represent all three years' classes.

Enosinian Society

The Enosinian Society held another interesting meeting Friday, and very important business was transacted. After Mr. Solyom had given an extemporaneous speech on the "Freedom of the Press," the debate was held. The question was, "Resolved, That the Philippines should be accepted as a territory," and was discussed by Mr. Honn and Miss K. L. Smith, on the affirmative, and Mr. R. De S. Brown and Mr. Schoenfeld, on the negative. The vote on the merits of the arguments was a majority for the affirmative, and on the merits of the question, a close majority for the affirmative also. The amendment regarding the decision on the merits of the arguments by the judges, which has been unable to be passed for years, was passed by a three-fourths vote.

An amendment by Mr. Marshinney, relative to the qualifications of those who are to vote for the medals at the close of the year was passed also. It is very difficult to amend the constitution, as it requires a three-fourths vote and the action of the society at the last meeting was quite unusual. A special meeting was held Monday, relative to the annual banquet, which the society gives and it was decided to hold it Friday, the 23rd, in West Hall, where the society meets. The attendance of the society increases weekly, and all work so far forecast a very prosperous year.

The Co Eds

On Tuesday night, December 13, in the University library was held a social meeting for the girls of the College, given under the auspices of the Woman's League. Arrangements for the evening's entertainment were in the hands of a committee consisting of Miss McMillan, chairman; Misses Harrington, Salisbury, Allen, Watkins, Raber, Sherman, McMann, Burgdorf, Connor, Field, Neggal and Johnson, who acted as hostesses and saw that every one had a good time.

An attractive feature of the evening's entertainment was a progressive march, which took place to the accompaniment of lively music. The company was paired off, and each time the music ceased, the person on the right fell back one, thus giving each one the opportunity of talking to all the guests in turn.

There followed a short musical and literary program. Miss Birch rendered one of Grieg's Etudes in a most artistic manner, and Miss Bugbee gave several selections on the violin, which were heartily encored. Miss Merrill concluded the program with a humorous selection of James Whitcomb Riley, which was thoroughly appreciated.

After the program, refreshments, consisting of fruit punch and wafers, were served from a daintily arranged table set in the hall. The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing; and before breaking up, the Virginia Reel was danced by all, in the true old-fashioned style.

Of the chaperons, Mrs. Carroll and Mrs. Hodgkins were present and added much to the pleasure of the evening by their interest in its success. It was a time of good-fellowship and helpful social intercourse, and it is hoped that the league will enjoy many other as pleasant evenings together.

On Thursday, the 15th, at 12:30, there was held in West Hall, the second regular rehearsal of the Girls' Glee Club. The club has been asked to sing at the Senior Reception, on the 30th; and in order to make this possible, arrangements have been made for extra rehearsals to be held on Monday and Tuesday, the 19th and 20th, in addition to the regular rehearsal on Thursday, the 22nd.

Work was begun on Hawley's "The Sweetest Flower That Blooms." There was a large number present at the last meeting and it is urged that all the girls lend their efforts that the initial appearance of the Girls' Glee Club of the George Washington University may be as successful as possible.

A meeting of the Woman's League is scheduled for Tuesday evening, the 20th, at 6:30, in West Hall. The request for the meeting has come from the members at large; its purpose is to discuss the athletic outlook, with a view to commencing work immediately after the holidays.

Medical Notes

It is very gratifying to note that the Medical Classes gave strong support to the Student's Ball. It is natural that they should be more interested in any project to assist the Hospital than the classes of the other departments.

The Second Year Medical Class again demonstrated that they are taking an active interest in everything pertaining to student life. They sold a greater number of tickets than any other class in the University. This fact, considering the shortness of the notice and the proximity of the date of the ball to the holidays, is a source of great satisfaction to the officers of that class and they wish to take this method of thanking their classmates for the active interest which was shown in this function.

The word "Doctor" is synonymous of one who, whether physician or surgeon, is qualified to practice the healing art.

A doctor is one who is not only skilled in his profession, but is also a learned man, with both the capacity and the inclination to teach others.

Dr. Samuel Pritchard of Concord, took part in the midnight ride with Paul Revere.

"Tippecanoe" Harrison studied medicine.

Twenty-two physicians were members of the Provincial Congress of Massachusetts, 1774-75.

Five physicians were signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Victorien Sardou, the playwright, was once a medical student and made a special study of hypnotism.

Thomas Linacre was the first founder of the Royal College of Surgeons in London.

Sir Hans Sloane, a physician, was the actual founder of the British Museum, the greatest library in the world.

Alexander Monro, a Scotch surgeon, was born in London in 1697 and died in 1767. A communication between the lateral and third ventricles—forearm of Monro—is named for this anatomist.

Before and after

From the student's room at Children's Hospital, Washington, D. C.

Notice: Students of medicine who are permitted to attend the clinics in this hospital are to understand that they must confine themselves strictly to those parts of the building which are allotted to them, that they must not wander into other parts nor into the grounds; noisy or boisterous conduct will not be tolerated. Anyone violating these rules will be noted and will lose the privilege of attending the clinics and be rigidly excluded from the premises. There must be no lingering after the conclusion of the lectures. It would be well for students to understand that they are enjoying a valuable privilege and that the hospital derives no benefit from their attendance. (Signed) The Executive Committee.

The Class of 1904

Probably a larger per cent of the class of '04 have started out in some branch of their profession than any class that has ever graduated from this school, and the writer feels sure that the faculty and friends of these young men will be glad to learn just what they are doing.

Alumni Notes

Professor Munroe has kindly consented to the use of the following letter, recently received by him, which, it is to be hoped, is but typical of a general feeling on the part of the alumni:

Stoneham, Mass.,
December 1, 1904.

Professor Charles E. Munroe, Ph. D.,
George Washington University,
Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Munroe:

I know you will be glad to learn from any of us who are at a distance how greatly we are interested in the developments at the University.

Everything seems to me to have come on most happily and auspiciously. I have watched the bulletins with the most intense interest, and have been highly delighted with the naturalness as with the inevitableness with which our University has taken up what the "Transcript has called its "manifest destiny."

Not a jar in the whole movement, at this distance. The George Washington University is unique for the future as no other university can parallel it.

The last bulletin is a splendid output, and nothing will advertise the University better than such a piece of work. Not only the matter, but the mechanical "get-up" of the bulletin also gives it distinction.

After various experiments in cover colors the present buff and blue seem to me to hit it exactly. I suppose this will be the permanent design.

There is just room to add my assurances of warmest regards for yourself and of loyalty to the University.

Faithfully yours,

B. Alfred Dumm.

Mr. Dumm received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from our University in 1900.

Two of our alumni are engaged in the practice of law in St. Joseph, Mo. Mr. William B. Morris, received the degree of LL. B. in 1886, and since his graduation has twice been honored by election to the office of prosecuting attorney.

Mr. Sidney S. Wilson is an LL. B. of the class of 1902.

OLIVER L. BELL, PRINTER.
1808 PENNA. AVE., N. W.

This issue of "The Hatchet" will be the last for the year 1904. Our next number will appear on January 11, 1905. In the intervening two weeks the editors in common with the rest of the student body will take a holiday.

At this time it seems fitting for us to express our thanks for the support and encouragement that has been given the paper this year both by faculty and students, and to assure them of our continued regard for and interest in their welfare. We wish to one and all a pleasant holiday season, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Announcement is made today in our columns of the recognition of the canoe club by the faculty, and its establishment as the George Washington University Canoe Club, a University organization, under the control of the Athletic Council. This has been the aim and object of the members of the club for a long time, and we are glad to see that they have succeeded in their design.

But we hope that their success means more than the establishment of an ordinary club for the pleasure of its members. We hope that it marks the entrance of the University into aquatic sports, and the intention of the Athletic Council to support and further this policy. From time to time we have looked forward to the establishment of boating, and we take this to mean that this course is to be pursued.

In any event, this club, drawing its membership as it does, from the whole University, will further the tendency of bringing together the students of the different departments, and the establishment of social intercourse among them.

There are many canoeists in the University who have not yet associated themselves with the club, and now they should at once make application and get in at the start.

This club is something the University has long lacked and needed, and we wish it all possible success.

Columbian Wins Debate

The first of the series of debates between the Columbian and Needham Societies was held last Friday evening in University Hall. The question debated was Resolved, That labor unions should incorporate as a condition precedent to demanding recognition by employes. Mr. Jesse W. Barrett, President of the Columbian Society, presided. The judges, who were Hon. W. W. Brown, Auditor for the Navy Department, and Professors Walter C. Clephane and Earnest G. Lorenzen, of the University, rendered a unanimous decision in favor of the Columbian Society, awarding first honors to Mr. Leonie Bone of the Needham Society, and second honors to Carlos A. Badger of the Columbian Society.

The gentlemen who participated in the debate were: For the Columbian Society, which supported the affirmative, Messrs. Julius A. Tellier, Vermont; Carlos A. Badger, Utah, and Allen G. Flowers, South Carolina. For the Needham Society, Messrs. James H. Price, South Carolina; Adam M. Beeler, Indiana, and Leonie Bone, Illinois. A summary of the arguments presented by each of the speakers follows:

Mr. Tellier, the first speaker of the affirmative, after interpreting the question outlined the argument of the affirmative into the following divisions: First, that incorporation of labor unions is expedient from the standpoint of the employer; secondly, from the standpoint of the labor union itself, and thirdly, from the standpoint of the public at large. He maintained under the first division, that incorporation would tend toward the elimination of industrial wars. Many disputes between capital and labor are due to the unequal standing in the eyes of the law of the two contracting parties—capital being responsible while labor is not. As possessing a legal status the law knows but three parties—and individual, a partnership, and a corporation. A voluntary association of men cannot be sued in its association name, and therefore if redress is to be had, all the members of the association must be made parties. As labor demands that capital contract with it in associated bodies, the employer has a right to demand mutual responsibility. At present labor unions are not responsible, and if they become incorporated they will have a legal standing and thus become responsible.

Mr. Price opened for the negative, and proceeded to outline the burden of proof, to the effect that the affirmative must show that no matter how well organized and conservative a labor organization may be, it should not be recognized by the employer until it has become incorporated; that under this distinction a bad union which had incorporated might receive the ear of capital while a good unincorporated union would be refused recognition: then, too, under the wording of this question even after the union has become incorporated, it is not incumbent for the employer to recognize it. Mr. Price then proceeded to outline the argument for the negative. First, that no remedy in the form of incorporation is needed as labor unions are now responsible in the eyes of the law; second, that incorporation would not make the unions more responsible or remedy the evils which now exist; and third, the incorporation of the unions would work a positive detriment to all parties concerned. He challenged, in presenting his argument under the first head, the affirmative to show one case where a labor union could not be reached by the courts.

Mr. Badger was the second speaker on the affirmative, and after rebutting some of the arguments of Mr. Price, proceeded to establish his position that from the standpoint of the union itself, it would be expedient for it to incorporate. He showed that at present the individual members were responsible for the tortious acts of the union, and that by incorporating their individual liability would be removed. He dwelt at some length on the restraining influence incorporation would have on unlawful conduct on the part of the union, and that an added responsibility would cause the officers to act more conservatively; that knowing a breach of contract could not be made with impunity, greater care would be taken in the selection of the officers of the union and much more hesitancy would be experienced before incurring liability for breach of contract or commission of tort. Mr. Badger showed earnestness and much force in his presentation and directed his entire attention to the judges.

Mr. Badger was followed by Mr. Beeler, the next speaker on the negative. His argument was directed to the establishment of the second proposition of the negative that incorporation would not make the unions more responsible than they are now. His contentions were that the individuals composing the unions are now liable for breach of contract and the commission of a tort or crime, and that an injunction lies to restrain even a voluntary association from doing an act which, if done, would result in irreparable injury to an individual or the public. That unincorporated unions can be sued in their names without making their members parties defendants, he cited the famous English case of the Taff Vale Railway Company vs. The Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants recently decided by the House of Lords; and he contended that the reasoning used by the Law Lords has been cited with approval by prominent lawyers in this country. In concluding his argument, Mr. Beeler painted a glowing picture of how much civilization owes to the efforts of labor, and appealed to the judges whether, in the view of these achievements, unions should be burdened with the dangers of incorporation.

Mr. Flowers was the concluding speaker of the affirmative, and maintained that incorporation would prove beneficial to the public, by arbitration of grievances between the employer and employed and thus eliminating the great inconveniences which the public usually suffers by reason of industrial wars. This arbitration, he contended, would naturally follow when both parties became responsible, as breaches of contract would naturally be adjusted in courts of justice. Another benefit to the public would be that derived as a result of cheaper cost of production consequent upon the elimination of industrial waste due to strikes, lockouts, and boycotts. When the labor market is uncertain and unsteady, the employer must charge higher prices as a means of insurance against loss incident to labor wars, etc. As strikes are an economic waste, they are detrimental to the public; and since incorporation would result in legal arbitration of differences, the public would naturally benefit by it. Mr. Flowers concluded by saying that "trade unions being influential in their collective capacity owe a duty to the public, and they should take such action as would tend to benefit the public, especially so when it is shown that such action is not inimical to their interests: and since incorporation would benefit the public, the unions should perform their manifest duty by incorporating."

Mr. Bone, the concluding speaker for the negative, spent much of his time effectively in rebutting the arguments of the affirmative, and created some merriment by producing later returns from the Hon. Carroll D. Wright, relative to the legal responsibility of labor unions. Mr. Bone showed much spirit in his debate and held the attention of the judges and audience throughout by his repeated attacks upon the contentions of the affirmative. In his constructive argument he maintained that incorporation, instead of increasing the responsibility of the unions would decrease it by eliminating the responsibility of the individuals. Furthermore, the unions would incorporate as benevolent and business corporations, the former of which would contain the most of their funds, which could not be reached for breach of contract or commission of a tort by the business corporation. Besides, incorporation is no guarantee of solvency, and the funds of the business corporation being constantly depleted by litigation, a judgment would often times not be worth the paper it was written on. Incorporation would work positive injury to the unions as it would subject it to appointment of receivers in the event of bankruptcy, and its destruction would naturally follow. He questioned the soundness of the argument that incorporation would make the unions more conservative, but asserted that it would have the contrary effect, as the members knowing their individual liability is removed would become more radical and do more acts of lawlessness. The disruption of the union would be threatened by stock coming into the hands of the union's enemies, and as the courts are greatly influenced by capital, questions of dispute coming before them would more often be decided in favor of the employer. As the unions have done much good, they should be recognized by the employers without incorporation.

Mr. Tellier concluded the debate by a five-minute rebuttal, in which he showed himself a very capable extempore speaker. Argument after argument went down before his assaults, and he showed in a very convincing manner that the fears of the unions were unfounded. He criticized the negative severely for casting reflection upon the integrity of our courts, which are the bulwarks of our liberties. Mr. Tellier was well received, and he showed thorough preparation on the subject.

The debate was a very good one, and it is to be regretted that a larger attendance was not present. The members of the societies should make greater efforts in bringing out their friends upon these occasions so that the debators will not have the discouraged spectacle of row upon row of empty seats. The student body also ought to show a greater interest in this work and encourage the speakers by their presence. S. E.

Debating Notes

The Georgetown University has elected to support the affirmative of the question—Resolved, That the maintenance of the open shop subserves the better interests of the laboring. The term "open shop" construction classes shall be construed to mean a shop in any trade where union and non-union men work together.

At the second preliminary contest for places on the team to debate the University of Virginia on February 18, 1904, the judges, consisting of Dean Tucker, Dean Wilbur, and Professor Lorenzen, selected the following gentlemen to compose the team: Carlos A. Badger, Utah; William H. Woodwell, Jr., Connecticut; George A. Malcolm, Michigan, and Fred B. Rhodes, Maryland, alternate. These gentlemen are all excellently qualified for the places and whatever will be the result of the debate, their friends have the fullest confidence that they will acquit themselves with credit to the University they represent.

A movement is on foot to charter a special car to take down a delegation of rooters to Charlottesville for the debate.

By all means let the matter be well known among the students and by all those who desire to accompany the team should hand in their names to the Inter-collegiate Debate Comm. as soon as possible. A delegation of one hundred men to escort the team would be an excellent manifestation of university spirit and the familiar yells of George Washington as our boys appeared before the footlights would make them feel perfectly at home and would spur them on to greater earnestness and enthusiasm in the presentation of their arguments.

The University Congress

The Congress in regular session assembled last Saturday evening by an overwhelming vote refused citizens of the District of Columbia the franchise on local questions. The storm was responsible for the absence of the leaders, and volunteers were appointed by the speaker. After the question had been threshed over, the Congress went into committee of the whole, with Mr. Rickard of Hawaii in the chair. Questions for consideration in the future were suggested, members appointed to chairmanships of important committees, and these questions referred to the committee for drafting in proper form. The subject already determined upon for the next meeting was changed, a bill for the restoration of the army canteen substituted.

Mr. Morris, of Kentucky, was unanimously elected speaker for the ensuing term. The wording of the question, speakers, and briefs for the meeting on January 7, 1905, will be published later.

Law Notes

One of the best class smokers in the life of the University was held last Friday evening when the Second Year Law Class, with President Needham, Dean Tucker, Professors Vance and Lorenzen, and Messrs. Pepper and Moore, presidents of the Third and First Year Classes, respectively as its guests, gathered in the banquet hall at the Shoreham.

A splendid supper was served at 10 o'clock, after which D. H. McLean, class president, called for the toasts, responses to which were received with rousing applause. President Needham, in responding to the "George Washington University" spoke of the history of the institution, outlined its future policy, and urged upon the students the fact that its ultimate success must depend in a large degree on the individual ability and integrity of its graduates.

Dean Tucker responded to "The Lawyer and the Man," Professor Vance, "Contracts, Marriage and Otherwise," and Professor Lorenzen to "Foreign University." Messrs. Pepper and Moore extended the felicitations of their respective classes to the class. A flash-light picture was taken of the class.
